Consecration of Yourself to God

Issur melakhah – “abstinence from work,” this is the sign which your God expects from you on every Sabbath. Abstinence from work is the sign which He seeks to prove whether you can still call yourself His. Abstinence from work is the sign by which you are to demonstrate that God is the Creator of heaven and earth, that He is also your Creator and that you, too, belong to Him.

For six days the world belongs to you, for six days you may exercise your dominion over everything that your God has created, and perform “melakhah,” you may stamp your creative impression upon everything and make it the agent of your will, the executor of your purpose. But on the seventh day you shall testify that, after all, the world is not yours, that you are not its ultimate ruler, but merely God’s vassal on earth, that you live and work only by God’s grace, that He is your Lord and Master, the Lord and Master of the smallest as of the greatest creature within your ken. To this you shall testify by giving the world its freedom on this day, by retiring into that sphere which is subject to you and by not exerting your powers on any work of God to bend it to your purpose.

By issur melakhah, by abstinence from work on the Sabbath, you place yourself and your work reverently on God’s holy altar.

By issur melakhah you make the twenty-four hours of the Sabbath a continual dedication of the world to your God and a consecration of yourself.
